

The New York Young Republican Club

Record

Letter from the Sergeant-at-Arms:

Hello and welcome! I would like to thank you for taking the time to read this issue of The Record, and for your continued support of the New York Young Republican Club (NYYRC). My name is Dylan Gallagher, and I serve as the Sergeant-at-Arms for the Club. Previously, I served as Design Chairman, and I continue to oversee that team's efforts.

Design and politics may not seem like they have much to do with each other, but I assure you that design has played an integral role in our great American story since its inception. One of the greatest American designers, Thomas Jefferson, was a trained architect and went on to design the University of Virginia and other notable buildings in the DC area. Additionally, he designed the document that we still live by today: the Constitution of the United States of America. Our Founding Fathers designed this document to allow America to be the greatest nation in the world. Politics involves planning, decision-making, policy creation, and communicating a message. One can argue that the same method is undertaken in design. Michael Bierut, a famous graphic designer, once said, "Much, if not most, graphic design is about communicating messages, and many of these messages are intended to persuade. This places its practice clearly in the realm of politics." This is what the Design Committee hopes to help the NYYRC achieve now and in the future.

I first joined the Club during a dark time in American history, Biden's "Inauguration". Seeking an outlet from my very liberal workplace, I thankfully found the NYYRC. Talking to other members, I was reassured that there is hope for our nation, and it is found right here at the NYYRC. Using my architectural education, I was able to apply design skills to help the Club share our values and beliefs to our member base, and the larger conservative movement.

The Design Committee has grown in numbers and is responsible for the creation of all graphic and branding materials for the Club. We have also recently launched a new Merchandise Sub-Committee, which has been busy updating our store with new NYYRC apparel. Whether it is a Club event advertisement, a design on our social media, a political handout (don't worry, not the Democrat kind!), or new and improved merchandise, the design team is at your service! If you have a design background and want to join us, we welcome you to the team! I am grateful to serve as Sergeant-at-Arms and to continue my role on the Design Committee since it enables me to leverage my background to help our cause. We hope to see you at a future event soon!

Yours in Freedom,

Dylan J. Gallagher

Happy 1st Birthday to the Record!!

The issue you are reading right now is the 13th consecutive issue of the Record since its revival in May 2021, thus marking its 1 year anniversary! As the Publications Chairman for the NYYRC, I am beyond proud that we have been able to provide our members with a monthly periodical that can not only inform you on conservative politics and Club activities, but archive a time in which this organization has worked harder than ever before to fight the tyranny of the radical left. The Record aims to spread the word to all Young Republicans in the NYC metropolitan area and let them know that you are not alone. It lets them know that there are many others like you in your surroundings and this is your time now, more than ever, to stand up and fight! Pick up a copy, share it with your friends physically and on social media, and continue the fight!

Member Spotlight: Rosie Record

Rosie Record has always had one pointe shoe or fingertip in the arts—from dancing with NYC's Joffrey Ballet Company and Salt Lake City's Ballet West to becoming a choreographer, producer, and performer for the University Dance Company and Ballet de Barra, from composing scores for short films and documentaries to finally publishing her first novel. She believes art has the power to hold a mirror up to society and ask, "Do you still like what you see?"

After graduating with honors from Cal State San Bernardino she joined the working ranks as an Information Technology Business Consultant. For 8+ years she traveled the country and consulted a multitude of Fortune 500 companies within the insurance, banking, retail, and telecommunications fields. She worked to empower marketing teams and facilitate changes within company ecosystems in order to increase global outreach, brand awareness, and revenue.

During the pandemic/lockdown, Record sat down at her laptop and finally completed TRONICK, a cyberpunk novel with strong libertarian ideals. In an interview, she said, "I see my millennial peers immerse themselves in social media to the detriment of their individuality. It seems we are willfully becoming a malleable society pushed around by these media giants. I started this story several years ago with that observation in mind, and over time it has evolved into something deeper, more sinister, and highly pertinent in today's world. Now, I believe my book has the power to resonate with all generations." It seems Record's green-soaked dystopia and conflicted antihero will become more and more apropos as younger generations grow up within a society that values optics over truth.

Letter from the Catholic Caucus

By: Michael R. Bartels, Chairman

My name is Michael R. Bartels and I am the Chairman of the Catholic Caucus, which has become the largest of the New York Young Republican Club's many budding caucuses. We were founded to promote and defend the Christian values upon which our Founders based our nation - and upon which those before them based Western civilization. Our members come from parishes all across the New York metropolitan area. The caucus of course acts as a home to Catholics, but also to the Protestants, Orthodox, agnostics, and Jews who find kinship in our cause and values.

I joined the NYYRC because I see my city, my state, and my nation in trouble. That's not even a partisan statement, really—about three-fifths of the nation has agreed on that since about 2010. Being a Republican in New York unfortunately means we are used to people not doing the right thing. Government officials don't usually listen to you because you're not their preferred constituency. The old adage proves right here: if you want something done right, do it yourself.

When I thought about what needs to be done in our nation, I realized that among all things we need hope. The pandemic lockdowns, bankruptcies, upheavals, crime, and economic destruction have left many without hope. Many churches have been stifled or shuttered. Born on the boundary between millennial and Gen Z, I speak for the young, and in many ways the young want nothing more than hope. They want God, even if years of life in a culture that mocks religion bids them to dare not utter that sentiment. After seeing protesters in many anti-lockdown rallies hold up crucifixes and rosaries against both police lines and communist counter-protesters, I began to pray that God would give our public life some hope. This prayer became the caucus.

A nation proclaims itself through its people, and the Catholic Caucus seeks to reaffirm and strengthen that proclamation. Traditionally, the Republican Party has defended the virtue of the free market, the blessing of individual liberty, the sanctity of life, and the love of one's nation at home and abroad. While we have only even existed for a few months and are still growing, our caucus has already discussed how to expand upon that foundation.

As I am also the Vice Chairman of the Library Committee, our primary goal is education. Far too often we focus on legalistic issues. When we defend free speech we point to an amendment. This is the way it should be, and these sacred words ought to be respected; their authors certainly felt that way. Many Americans feel that way. I do not. We should defend free speech because those who censor often seek to suppress virtue. We should defend our rights not because they were written in the Bill of Rights, but because they were endowed upon us by our Creator and stem from the natural dignity of the human person. Conveniently, our founding documents echo that sentiment. I do not find it sufficient that conservatives simply try to conserve. Conservatives, based on the foundations of our civilization, must firmly grasp that which they must conserve: the American people, and their city upon a hill, shining with the greatest virtue.

We also discuss and promote awareness of that which we stand against: the debasement of civilization, manic deconstruction, and the simulacrum of intellectual depth masquerading as liberation. The Catholic Church foils the intellectual Left; consequently I am writing as a Republican and not a Democrat here. Many of today's "progressives" discuss sustainability but will not discuss falling birth rates, the collapse of the family, and the reckless economic mismanagement that not only robs the next generation of prosperity, but even to a great extent of their very existence. The Church promotes true sustainability, reiterating the timeless truths she has enunciated for two millennia. Long after the fads of today subside, the gods of the copybook headings will remain, and to these deities (or deity, in God) we owe our allegiance.

How will we promote Catholic virtue in the civic swamp? Recently we have focused on recruitment, but as the election year marches on, we will shift to campaigning with various candidates that we believe will promote a virtuous society. Speakers and debates will be important. Visibility is crucial: in this "common era" where Christianity has been all but banned from the public sphere, I've found that simply talking about the faith openly is enough to get people listening. The same goes for conservatism in New York; if you bring up basic principles of the American tradition, people often listen and agree. Anyone who genuinely loves God and seeks truth is welcome in the Church and in this caucus, including you.

Even as the largest caucus, we are still but a tiny seed in the most important city in America. I hope that someday folks will look back on the New York Young Republican Club and its Catholic Caucus as a light in the darkness of the early twenty-first century, one that lit a fire of hope for our nation and the world. I am writing this on Good Friday, the anniversary of our founder Jesus's crucifixion. I know He will make something great of us; He conquered death.

Christ is King.

A Clueless Girl Thrust into the World of Politics

By: Alexis Winters

I know close to nothing about politics. I've said this for years, and I find myself saying it even more lately. Somehow in the last couple of months, I've found myself in the center of New York City local politics and I have no idea how to act. I have met many important people and told them to their face, "I don't know who you are." That line is pretty polarizing, and I find that it's a good way to get a sense of someone's character. If they laugh it off, then they're probably a genuine person, but if they get offended and turn cold because of it then they're probably not someone I want to know.

I've never pretended to know what I'm doing in this sphere, and it used to terrify me when I would go to these events and meet these important people. But I've found that a lot of people like that I'm clueless. They find it refreshing that I don't have an agenda or some secret affiliation they don't know about. I've also grown more confident in my own skills and knowledge. There's still so much I don't know or understand, but I've learned a lot in the few months that I've been doing this.

I find that a lot of people in politics care way more about what others think than voters do. The truth is we don't care if you're well liked or not, we just care if we think you're going to fight for us. That's one of the reasons Trump was so successful; people may not have liked him, but everyone knew that he would go to bat for America no matter what. Politicians are so concerned with being liked and keeping people on their side. I find it so much more admirable when a candidate is willing to fight against the establishment.

I hate that we live in a world where just because a candidate is endorsed by the party, we all have to support them. We should be able to choose our own candidate to support, regardless of party affiliation. We've gone down this slippery slope of prioritizing party affiliation over actual issues. We can't just vote for Republicans or Democrats regardless of who it is anymore. That's how we ended up with President Biden; people were so tired of President Trump and by extension, the Republican party, that they were willing to vote for someone that any sane person could see is not duly fit for office.

Whenever I meet people in politics, they are so fascinated by me and my point of view, and that's because I'm not immersed in this world the way that they are. I can speak the language of the average voter because I am the average voter. I know that people are tired of hearing the same ideas said in different ways every year and still nothing changes. People don't want to hear the same talking points that the old GOP have been spouting for years. They're tired of hearing the same speeches and seeing the same disappointing results. Instead of using the same ideas that every Republican has been using, like pro-capitalism, tax cuts, etc. It would resonate more with young people to admit the mistakes the government has made in our capitalist economic system, like the 2008 financial crisis. It would be refreshing to hear a Republican candidate that isn't thinking the same things that every other candidate is.

I think that politics could benefit from having a few more people like me. People who are so immersed in this world forget sometimes that the average person doesn't think like they do. They don't know about all the things going on in the background and because of that they see the world and politics differently. They don't understand that everyone has a hidden agenda, and it's rare for people to have genuinely good intentions. I always knew that there were corrupt people in politics and my experience in New York politics has confirmed that. I think that any person who gets power will become corrupt; it's inevitable. Being aware of that and having people around you to keep you in check is so important. A lot of politicians don't have that and that's where they're going wrong.

The average person only knows what's right in front of them. The average voter doesn't weigh the same factors that so called "political insiders" do, they make value judgements that are rooted in what they see in the public arena. Because of this, they hold a cleaner opinion, one that is not tainted by political cliques where the only way to rise in ranks is by having the right connections. They don't think about the implications of people's actions and because of that their opinions are purer. They aren't constantly analyzing a politician's every move and speech. They take them at face value. They aren't influenced by pettiness or personal vendettas. They take each candidate for who they are, and they vote accordingly. That's the way we should all vote. Not because they're affiliated with a party or because a politician who we respect endorsed them. Candidates should be judged on their own merit, not on their affiliations or endorsements.

If we really want to revamp the political sphere, we have to take all these things into consideration. We don't have to submit to the will of the old GOP anymore. There are more of us than there are of them, and I really believe that young people can take this over if we work together. We can create a new Republican Party, an America First Party. We don't have to pander to the older generation in order to be respected or to win. It does more harm than good in the end. If we're constantly electing the same people, we aren't going to see change. It's time for a new era in politics.

Millennials Realigning Around Marriages, Mortgages, and Children

By: Troy Olson, Policy Chairman, and Chairman, Veterans Caucus

In his recent book The Dying Citizen, Dr. Victor Davis Hanson noted that the middle class is the key to the maintenance of a self-governing republic or representative democracy. The strongest values and ethic of citizenship are to be found within the middle class. Therefore, any society such as ours must take great care to understand first what creates a middle class to begin with and how to move more people into it to create good citizenship. He further noted that the key measures of a healthy middle class are marriage, children, and home ownership. For the past few decades what has increasingly befallen America with few interruptions has been a two-front war on America's middle class and with it the meaningfulness of American citizenship.

If America's middle class is to survive in the coming decades at all it needs a political vessel to promote its survival. That middle class will be made up of working generations having children which currently is the millennial generation.

While much has been written about the millennial generation maturing into economic stagnation or all the various industries millennials are killing — the truth is that millennials have found their vessel in the form of their long realignment into the Republican Party and now the question is will the Republican Party champion policies that will make it the millennials' and younger generations' champion in the years and decades ahead?

Whatever the future holds, since 2008, millennials, the once and future core of the Democrats "demographic inevitability" coalition, have been gradually and recently, increasingly realigning into the Republican Party across the board. The biggest indicator of who has been realigning are exactly the markers of the middle class and the maintenance of good citizenship that Dr. Hanson identified. Millennials that are getting married, taking on mortgages, and having children are who is realigning, and this is turning the Republican Party more and more into a diverse working- and middle-class party of parents. In a recent Marist poll—parents with kids under 18 in the household are 60% Republican and just 32% Democrat.

Millennials who are getting married are trending Republican even though compared to prior generations marriage rates are down. However, of the millennials that are married, so far, they are staying married at higher rates compared to prior generations. If these trends continue and if the younger cohort of millennials get married to boost marriage rates above 50% this will be good for the future of America. On an individual level, marrying a person rather than marrying the state is also a good way to avoid poverty. Specifically, if you finish high school, get a job, and get married before having children you have a 98% chance of poverty avoidance.

Millennials who are taking on mortgages are also trending Republican. The home mortgage is the backbone of middle-class wealth and much of, if any potential of passing down that wealth to the next generation. Home ownership is also much more common in Republican districts and counties compared to Democrat districts and cities. A nation of homeowners is more likely to be able to preserve our way of life and our system of self-governance than a nation of renters, which if the World Economic Forum has their way, we're on the road to being. Millennials, like in many indicators do lag prior generations for much talked about reasons (graduating into tough economic years and being the major one) but this is another trend that is picking up. While in 2020, 47.9% of millennials owned homes, in 2022 the age group consists of 43% of homebuyers. This is a trend that if it continues will contribute to better maintenance of properties, stronger communities, and better civics as homeowners vote at higher rates than renters do and are more likely to move beyond mere voting when it comes to civic participation.

Finally, millennials who are having children are trending Republican the most as these prior two trends often lead to this one and if all three are present, the likelihood goes up even more. If millennial parents continue to identify as Republican at a level of nearly two to one, not only is the generation that was supposed to represent the core voting base of an era of supposed Democrat dominance already gone, but it could get even worse because there is more room to grow given the younger end of the generational age range and the fact that the generation behind millennials have started off six percent less Democrat. This is why education across-the-board and specifically what we teach our children has become such a politically charged issue recently whereas in decades past it was either more settled or an issue with less salience.

Biden and the Democrats have a long way to go to solve their issues with younger generations and the lack of enthusiasm from their own younger voters. Their approach on student loans suggests the same sort of flawed thinking that has put the party in this position. A student loan cancelation or forgiveness may work well with the younger progressive, but it will gain no new voters and stands to anger many more and make them less persuadable. A student loan bailout absent a larger structural reform to the higher education financing system, a bubble created by federal government policy the last three decades, will just put us back in the same situation again in a few decades.

However, rather than focus on heavily indebted students and their deservedness for such a windfall — a wise course of action for Republicans would be to know full well the trends that are creating newfound demographics are once again destiny the other way. By focusing on interest payments and bringing the student loan system more in line with mortgage interest within the tax code and other policies and proposing reforms that are tied to marriage and family — we could see a union of good policy and good politics. We should be incentivizing marriage and intact families and making it easier to raise a family in this country rather than so many of our current policies which incentivize marrying the state. The gains will be felt for years to come if we can reverse these trends in policy in the form of a middle-class citizenry that helps us guide the civics of the country and fate of the American constitutional republic to a much more secure place.

Endorsement: Robert Cornicelli For Congress (NY-2)

The New York Young Republican Club proudly endorses Robert Cornicelli for New York's Second Congressional District. Cornicelli, a veteran of both the United States Navy and the United States Army National Guard, dedicated his life to serving his country and community. He enlisted shortly after graduating from high school in the United States Navy as a Petty Officer Third Class, and served for four years. After returning home, he served another four years as part of the United States Navy Reserve.

As a private citizen, Cornicelli began as a sanitation worker and quickly rose through the ranks of the department. He earned an Associate's of Arts from Nassau Community College, and a Bachelor of Arts from C.W. Post in International Affairs and Political Science. During his studies, Cornicelli heard his country's call to service after the terrorist attacks of 9/11, and re-enlisted in the United States Army National Guard. Cornicelli would continue to answer the call for responsible conservative leadership as a Congressman. He aspires to return to the Second Congressional District to prioritize the needs of his district's citizens.

Cornicelli promises to work ardently to listen and address the concerns of his district, stating, "I am a retired Army Officer and Conservative America First candidate running against Jan 6 Committee supporter RINO Garbarino in NY CD2." "The increase at the pump is not Russia's fault, ITS JOE BIDEN'S FAULT. Joe Biden, the radicals on the left, and RINO's like Andrew Garbarino are responsible for your suffering not Russia." (Cornicelli4ny, Twitter). The New York Young Republican Club strongly urges New York voters to support Robert Cornicelli for New York's second congressional district.

Endorsement: Anthony D'Esposito For Congress (NY-4)

The New York Young Republican Club proudly endorses Anthony D'Esposito for New York's Fourth Congressional District. Currently, D'Esposito serves as a Hempstead Town Councilman, a role he has held since February 2016. D'Esposito began his career in public service by joining the New York City Police Department, where he rose to the rank of detective and, in doing so, made more than 600 arrests in connection with violent crime. D'Esposito has effectively budgeted town spending in his current role and has consistently prioritized taxpayers by preserving town programs and services while eliminating wasteful government spending.

Leveraging his experience in law enforcement, as a Councilman, D'Esposito has committed to teaching local community members about the dangers of illicit substance use while equipping them with knowledge of how to save lives with Narcan. Through his efforts, the participants of his Narcan training sessions receive Narcan kits and invaluable knowledge to further fight the scourge of drugs ravaging Long Island communities.

D'Esposito, an Island Park native, feels that "America is on the wrong track, in chaos as a result of policies of Joe Biden and the extreme socialists who have taken over the Democrats. He is a problem solver, firefighter, NYPD Detective, and Hempstead Town Councilman who's delivered for neighbors. He is running for NY-04 to be his neighbors' voice." (@AnthonyDESPO, Twitter)

D'Esposito vows to put America First in Congress and to push for policies that keep Long Island communities safe and prosperous. The New York Young Republican Club strongly urges all NY-04 voters to support Anthony D'Esposito for New York's Fourth Congressional District.

Statement On The Events Of April 12th, 2022

In ordinary times, the morning news that your lieutenant governor has been arrested for bribery, and since has resigned, would be the story of the day—but not in New York and tragically not on April 12th, 2022.

The New York Young Republican Club's thoughts and prayers go out to the victims, their families, and all of those affected by the attempted mass killing on the New York City subway on Tuesday. We further hope that the immediate focus stays there and on bringing the vile criminal perpetrator to justice, who has since been arrested. We do not expect this, though.

The pattern of Democrat behavior from Mayor Adams up to President Biden is to refer to "shootings" instead of "attempted murder", "murder" and "killing," and to shift the focus to "gun control" immediately. Dishonesty on the root causes of media headlines allows them to manipulate a situation to meet their ends. They know how to win power, gaslight, and control people with fear and radical empathy that is ultimately a manipulative narrative more than it is compassionate and productive.

Tuesday, for reasons we do not yet fully know and will not speculate about until more information is known, a human being, a criminal, decided to forever alter the lives of New York families.

We are not in ordinary times—we are in hard times. And hard times require strong, smart, and transparent leadership for our city and state.

Bail reform and progressive DAs who oversee turnstile justice that prioritizes criminals over victims are not strong and smart. Backing street activists, looking the other way while riots happen in our cities with "defund the police" slogans and then denying such riots occurred when the poll results come in is cowardly and unprincipled leadership. It's not leadership at all. We cannot go on like this. We cannot keep taking civilization for granted with the same people, one-party rule, and the same nonsense sloganeering and circular logic.

Governor Hochul, Mayor Adams, President Biden, Vice President Harris, and our recently arrested, resigned, and now former Lt. Governor Brian Benjamin are not leaders. They are cosplay politicians playing their part while our society crumbles.

We here at the New York Young Republican Club advocate common-sense policies but courageous, bold, and strong leadership in hard times, and we invite all New Yorkers and Americans who want to help preserve the safety of our communities, culture, and civilization to join us in this cause.

NY Democrats Try And Cosplay Their Glory Years With "Fair Deal" Line Rebrand

Reeling from two sudden statewide resignations, a failing national administration, and a municipal civic polity that votes at rates lower than the Mendoza Line, it is understandable that New York Democrats want to take a trip down memory lane by usurping Harry Truman's "Fair Deal" messaging, which he launched after his historical come-from-behind win in 1948. But President Truman would barely recognize what the party of Jefferson and Jackson has turned into.

One-party state Democrat policies have left a generation of children behind and failed to protect seniors. The standard liberal Democrat line of compassion once focused on support for people at the beginning of life and those in twilight of it; now, Democrats for muzzles on young children and suffocate seniors in nursing homes. Today, Harry Truman and Jack Kennedy would not even recognize their party.

New York's recovery from these authoritarian policies lags other states, unemployment in New York is higher than most states, and even before the pandemic, New York was near the bottom in tax climate and in business friendliness. The lockdowns were particularly harsh on our small businesses, which were forced to shutter and implement state dictates while big box stores stayed open and made record profits. New York

Democrats have had one-party control with no one to stop their utopia attempt for years here in New York City and State. More and more spending does not yield results, but it creates more entrenched interests and a machine catered to special interests.

New York Democrats under Andrew Cuomo, Kathy Hochul, and Jay Jacobs, and City Mayors Bill de Blasio and now Eric Adams have presided over a state and city where crime rates are up due to numerous poor decisions and ridiculous COVID policies that shut cities down, obscene restrictions on bail, and the election of progressive DA's intent on ruining quality of life in pursuit of nebulous objectives. The COVID policies did not yield results as the state had some of the highest deaths per capita in the nation.

At the same time, Democrats under temporary Saint Cuomo received no major scrutiny from the media for establishing policies that killed countless seniors in nursing homes at the height of the pandemic and simultaneously devastated the state's economy. Jacobs and company have read the internal polling, and in a one-party state they have no one to blame but themselves. Now they're scrambling and re-branding. But we're not buying it.

There is nothing fair and just about the modern politics of the Democrat Party. They have abandoned the working and middle classes, and it is time for all Americans, Republicans, Independents, and ancestral Democrats, to realize that they will never get a fair deal from the Democrats. Instead, it's time to revisit another historic "Deal" and to vote for a Square Deal from the party of the Union and the party that has preserved Liberty. In the coming months, the New York Young Republican Club, where the party's future meets and is inspired by the past—will roll out a populist and patriotic platform for the City, State, and Country in the 2020s and onward. Stay tuned!

Board Position Available: Activism Committee Chairman

The New York Young Republican Club is on the lookout for a new Activism Committee Chairman. The Chairman of this committee serves as a voting member of the Club's Board of Governors. We are looking for someone with a passion for both conservative politics and a background in political campaigns, grassroots activism, non-profits, or government.

The Activism Chairperson will be responsible for attending and organizing political rallies, protests, and other grassroots initiatives.

Applicants must be a current member of the Club in good standing and be willing to commit to at least one board meeting and one Club event per month.

If you are interested in applying for this position please fill out the application form on our website and if you qualify we will reach out to set up an interview.
