

The New York Young Republican Club

Record

Letter from the Membership Chairwoman:

“I got you” vs. “You got this.” I distinctly remember watching both the Republican and Democratic National Conventions when I was in the fourth grade, and realizing that this is the fundamental difference between Republicans and Democrats. If you were going through a period of adversity, your Republican friends would tell you the challenges you are facing are an opportunity to strengthen yourself as an individual and that you got this. Your Democratic friends would say that you are not alone and they got you. Both responses were valid – necessary, even. Back then I thought a good life was one surrounded by both types of people. Remember when it was normal to have friends all across the political spectrum?

This brings me to why so many of us are here, and why our Club is so essential. It’s a story I hear at every single event. I ask our members what drew them to our club and all too often they tell me how they’ve been ostracized by friends, family, and colleagues. How they’ve been called a racist, a terrorist, and some other combination of pejoratives impugning both their character and their intelligence. How relieved they are to finally be in a room full of proud patriots in the middle of the leftist bubble of New York City.

While I am someone who has always valued individual freedom over communal security, I understand that we are social creatures. Thinking is a communal activity. Original thoughts are born not in the echo chambers of our own minds, but in the heat of contention. The world reveals itself to us through conflict and so we need to be able to debate and discuss these ideas in the social arena. These days, the Democrats don’t even want to talk to us. This is why I believe the New York Young Republican Club is not a political club, but a social one.

As Membership Chairwoman, it is my first and foremost priority to ensure our Club fills that critical void in the lives of New York Republicans by creating a space for the free exchange of ideas, because freedom of thought cannot exist without freedom of speech. While I cringe at the concept, one could argue that the NYYRC is our “Safe Space”. And it certainly is. But it’s also our “Brave Space”: our space to gather the ammunition, the allies, and the morale to win the culture war, take back the moral high ground the Left hijacked, and ultimately save America!

Biden Bribe? "We are talking about real documents"

By Ian C. McMath, Media Chairman

As of February 24, the United States and NATO allies have surpassed the two-year mark of funding the war against the Russian Federation's so called special military operation to annex Russian speaking regions in eastern Ukraine, namely the Donbas and Crimea. Russia argues that the present conflict began not in 2022 but in 2014 with the Maidan Revolution, allegedly orchestrated by Western interests. It is objectively true that Russian civilization was born in Kiev, 1 in 4 people in Ukraine are Russian, and Russia considers Ukraine to be part of its vital national security interest. It is also true that Ukraine is neither a NATO ally nor an EU member, nor a territory of the United States. With this understanding, why is the United States of America so interested in Ukraine? Simona Papadopoulos has an answer.

Papadopoulos has uncovered court documents and recorded first person testimony that allege that the Biden family has been selling influence in Ukraine to the tune of millions of dollars in exchange for altering American foreign policy to that country to enrich oligarchs and their allies in a manner that violates the law. Apparently, America's support for the Ukraine has less to do with wise geopolitical strategy and more to do with old fashioned corruption. On March 7th, the New York Young Republican Club hosted Simona to listen to her findings.

If true, President Joe Biden would be in violation pursuant to Article 346-bis of the Criminal Code, where "an individual is guilty of influence peddling where he or she, by exploiting a real or apparent influence on a public official or a person in charge of a public service, (a) improperly requires, or solicits a promise to give, money or other in exchange for a favor." Compared to totally neglecting border security, the Afghanistan withdrawal disaster, and other Biden induced fiascos, this incident is the closest to satisfying the high crimes and misdemeanors that are prerequisite for impeachment. It makes you think about Trump's first impeachment, doesn't it? We'll get to that later.

Hunter Biden's infamous Laptop from Hell is a trove of evidence for family corruption and debauchery that references "the Big Guy" in conversations about kickbacks. For years, Hunter denied the authenticity of the laptop—until he finally demanded his property back. Simona casts further doubt on his integrity with evidence from the Ukrainian side, such as records of wire transfers filed in Ukrainian courts. "We're talking about the real documents, talking about $6 million bribes," she emphasized to applause. "So we have [these] official legal documents, they are not manufactured, they are not fabricated, they are not phony. Every single legal document is a record... everybody can go watch it and collect it."

How long have the Bidens been getting kickbacks in the embattled post-Soviet republic? Remember that under Obama, Biden was the Ukraine policy point man. Simona reminds us that we need only to go back to the Poroshenko-Biden recordings of that era to get a whiff of a rotten smell. These tapes reveal disputes between then Vice President Biden and Ukrainian President Petro Poroshenko (2014-2019) regarding Prosecutor General Viktor Shokin's investigation into Burisma, a Ukrainian natural gas company, where Hunter Biden was receiving around $80 thousand dollars a month for his supposed energy expertise. The context of all of this culminates in VP Biden's March 2016 leveraging of $1 billion dollars of US taxpayer funded foreign aid to force Ukraine to oust Shokin under the pretext of fighting corruption. Convenient. Those who notice crime get punished while the perpetrators walk free.

To further support her allegation of rampant Biden corruption in Ukraine, Simona interviewed Ukrainian politician and businessman Andrei Derkach. He has an impressive resume. He was Ukraine's longest serving parliamentarian, a presidential advisor, and an energy executive. Now living in exile in Belarus, his tenure as a staple of political life in Ukraine afforded him a front row seat to bald faced corruption. "We released documents revealing the transactions, revealing the corruption in Burisma," he said to Simona. "We provided financial statements from Morgan Stanley Bank" reporting suspicious activity on the accounts. "We showed a connection between Burisma and two companies involved in the money laundering, Veologic Technologies and Digitex." The case never went anywhere.

Does any of that sound criminal, if true? How about impeachable? In light of this, Trump's first impeachment looks like a cover-up. In the July 25th, 2019 phone call with President Zelenskyy, Trump is quoted in the transcript, "I heard you had a prosecutor who was very good and he was shut down and that's really unfair." A hound on the trail, he said, "There's a lot of talk about Biden's son, that Biden stopped the prosecution and a lot of people want to find out about that," adding that Rudy Giuliani was going to take point with Andrei Derkach to get to the bottom of it. Rudy was later recommended to be disbarred for his legal work in the 2020 election fraud case and Andrei was labeled an agent of the Kremlin, prompting his exile. The apparent message? Stop noticing crimes!

Deny, deflect, and defame; persecute the messenger, don't prosecute the crook. This is the time-honored strategy of the corrupt. The evidence of alleged grift surrounding the "Biden Crime Family" is too great to ignore. To his credit, Speaker Mark Johnson has allowed the slim Republican majority in the US House to investigate some of these allegations, but nothing at all to the extent to which Democrats investigated the long-since debunked Russia Collision Hoax.

When asked, do you think this is just the tip of the iceberg? Simona cautioned that as an investigative journalist with a legal background, she must be skeptical of claims and go to great lengths to verify authenticity. But on a wider level, she says, "We must think of which operator is still covering up for this? And this operator is the Deep State." Adding that, "Biden is only a puppet of it. Let us remember Hillary Clinton, George Soros, and many others."

Let us also remember how the intelligence community came out in front to cover up the laptop. With 51 former intelligence officials calling it Russian disinformation. How the FBI worked with Big Tech and mainstream media to censor true information before an election. The Leviathan is committed to keeping the con running—in this case and likely countless others. At least for now, we can be grateful that we are talking about it at all, thanks to President Donald J. Trump.

Building Bridges: The New York Young Republican Club's Outreach in Urban Communities

By Aldo J. Solares, History Chairman

In the lead-up to the March 16th, 2024 charity event, members of the New York Young Republican Club attended a Leadership Institute training session led by Matthew Hurtt. The session focused on strategies for engaging the Hispanic and broader communities in conservative politics. Speakers like Joel Valdez and Jesus Rodriguez shared political engagement, outreach, and communication insights. They addressed the challenges and opportunities in connecting with minority communities and the importance of leadership and messaging. The goal was to prepare participants to advocate for conservative values and policies effectively.

Following this insightful session, a commendable collaboration unfolded between the Black Caucus, the Hispanic Caucus, and the Philanthropy Committee of the NYYRC, in partnership with the Church of God Brownsville, to orchestrate a charity clothes giveaway. This initiative marked a significant step toward addressing a longstanding criticism: the perception that Republicans only visit these areas when seeking votes.

The event provided tangible assistance to low income individuals in the form of clothing, winter boots, jackets, gloves, and pants and offered an opportunity for meaningful dialogue. Along with smiling faces of appreciation, the feedback from the community was eye-opening: "You Republicans say you care about us, but you never show up. Only the Democrats are here!" This sentiment serves as a wake-up call for Republicans nationwide, emphasizing the need for a more consistent and genuine presence in urban communities. Unfortunately, this feedback is not new. The Chairman of the Hispanic Caucus, Argilio J. Rodriguez, issued a pointed critique, asserting, "Should the New York GOP continue to neglect these communities, then the Club will step in to fill that void."

Collaborating with faith-based organizations deeply rooted in these neighborhoods was a strategic choice. The NYYRC members, guided by the principle of putting God first alongside putting America first, were driven by the opportunity to live out their faith. This was reflected in their actions, drawing inspiration from the Book of James, specifically James 2:14-26, which emphasizes the inseparability of faith and works. This scripture underscores the belief that faith without action is dead, a message that resonated with the volunteers as they engaged with the community.

The interactions with the Dominican community in the Bronx, predominantly Spanish speakers, were particularly impactful. The residents expressed their gratitude for the event, highlighting the significance of every act of charity in times of economic hardship. The NYYRC volunteers made a conscious decision only to discuss politics if prompted, focusing instead on their mission to help the community and make a difference. The conversations often concluded with expressions of appreciation, such as "Qué bueno" and "Siempre es bueno ayudar a la comunidad. Gracias.", and a beautiful smile only a grateful mom can express.

We engaged in a thoughtful discussion with the pastor regarding the decline in church attendance and the weakening of family structures due to the absence of God at their center, which was also addressed. The NYYRC is committed to not only providing material assistance but also to fostering spiritual well-being. By encouraging people to visit church, listen to the Word of God, and engage in prayer, the Club aims to strengthen family bonds and guide young individuals in making pivotal life decisions with divine guidance.

In conclusion, the charity clothes giveaway was more than just a philanthropic event; it was a step toward bridging the gap between Republicans and urban communities historically forgotten or abandoned by the GOP. The New York Young Republican Club's proactive approach to collaborating with faith-based institutions and dedication to serving the community while spreading the Word of God is a commendable model for other organizations. The Club's gratitude for the opportunity to do good is palpable, and its commitment to continuing such works through its Philanthropy Committee is a promising sign for the future.

Have the Audacity to Be a Legend

By Ian C. McMath, Media Chairman

Zechariah 4:10, “Do not despise these small beginnings, for the Lord rejoices to see the work begin.”

To sustain an effective political movement, there must be a concerted effort to foster a pipeline of young talent. This shall always be a primary function of a young Republican club. The dust of the GOP civil war is settling and the Trump-led MAGA faction is the indisputable victor. The defeat of the McTriumvirate of McCarthy, McConnell, and McDaniel signals the death knell of RINO supremacy. Now the great task of building the new Republican Party on a national populist platform lies ahead, and the legion of beating hearts that will win races and staff offices will actualize this spirit. On Saturday, February 17th, an audience of 50 college students met in Manhattan to hear about the importance of personal initiative and coalition building. “Do not wait for a legend,” I tell them in the opening remarks, “but become a legend yourself.”

The New York Young Republican Club Media Committee collaborated with the New York Federation of College Republicans (NYFCR) to hold a winter conference of young and college Republicans. As the co-organizer of the event along with Tabitha Fajardo, we wanted to emphasize two things: personal initiative and coalition building at home and abroad. To inspire personal initiative we had three NYRC Club members speak about how they took it upon themselves to get involved in shaping the direction of the Republican Party. “Do not wait for permission to begin,” I said. To demonstrate the value of building coalitions at home and abroad we invited Austrian Member of the European Parliament Harald Vilimsky to speak on the subject.

Vish Burra is the Club’s Executive Secretary. He is a former Special Operative for Congressman Matt Gaetz and George Santos, and producer of Steve Bannon’s “War Room” and Gaetz’s “Firebrand” political talk shows. Vish emphasized the skills that he picked up in his misspent years as the “weed kingpin of Staten Island” informed him of how to take risks and maneuver in swamp politics later on. “Moving a famous Congressman around is not unlike moving contraband.” Let it be noted that scrupulosity and a good eye for suspicious activity go a long way in both illicit trades and Washington DC. Vish’s start in politics was opportunistic; he was part of the original palace coup that swapped the former weak NYRC leadership with a pride of MAGA lions.

Troy Olson is the Club’s Sergeant-at-Arms, post 9-11 veteran, co-author of The Emerging Populist Majority, Legislative Director for New York City Councilwoman Inna Vernikov, and lawyer. Troy hails from a small town in Minnesota from a legacy Democrat family. In a sentiment echoed by Elon Musk and inspired by Ronald Reagan, Troy states, “I didn’t leave the Democrat Party, the Democrat Party left me.” Troy is a born optimist and brims with hope for the future. He predicts that the lived experience of mature millennials will compel them to discard leftist ideology and move to the right as they coalesce around marriages, mortgages, families and children. His start in politics began the old-fashioned way, on the battlefield as an enlisted man and citizen soldier in the US Army.

Nick Rafael, the Club’s Publications Chairman, is responsible for producing The Record, the Club’s quarterly journal, and works as a financial analyst. He also publishes our annual Club Book and helps with other printed materials for various Club events. His story is an everyman's tale, unrelated to politics and he discovered the Club through mutual friends in a dodgeball league. Unlike the other speakers, Nick does not work in politics and he has no desire to. He scratches his political itch by volunteering his time to edit and publish The Record, and advance the Club's mission as a member of the Board of Governors. His story demonstrates that it is not necessary to pursue a career in politics to serve the movement in a capacity beyond merely voting.

All of the above have sacrificed Saturdays to knock on doors and phone-bank for candidates. Their actions, no matter how big or small, push the needle in the direction of rebuilding the Republican Party on a national populist platform even from within the great blue fortress of New York.

The national populist movement is ascendant not only in the United States but in Europe as well. Harald Vilimsky, Austrian MP of the EU Parliament and leader of the Freedom Party of Austria, is indicative of the Club's effort to build coalitions beyond the United States. Harald's presence at the event highlights awareness of the value of building relationships with conservative parties across Europe and the US. The Freedom Party's lead candidate stressed that when conservatives take power in their home countries, domestic governance is a challenge in its own right, but still greater is reshaping a global order that has been for too long dominated by liberal ideology. He talked of the importance of fostering a community of conservative parties in Europe and the United States and to act in concert against the forces of globalism.

"I am impressed by the rhetorical skills of the young people here," he said. "They really have the potential to become future political leaders. In any case, it is very important to network the conservative world in Europe and the USA, the problems are very similar and our solutions are often identical." He concluded with, "I want to and will continue to work to expand our political network."

The NYYRC fully endorses Harald Vilimsky's candidate for President of Austria. His victory would mean a triumphant return of executive spirit to an office that is more than a mere figurehead.

What exactly a national populist Republican Party will look like is still being defined. It will be different from the present order that puts GDP and multiculturalism above the nation. It begins with recognizing that the old order is untenable and crumbling. As I address the audience in my opening remarks, I tell them that "they are wealthy in their youth, because time is the greatest currency." The old civic order is literally passing away. Our moment is inevitable but should not be taken for granted. This is the time for small beginnings, for personal initiative and coalition building so that when opportunity presents itself, we may seize power, establish the new civic order, and renew our civilization. "There may be a future President in the room. But you must first have the audacity to begin, to become a legend."

Free Market Schooling is the Future of Education

By Michael Caprio

Schools are a crucial part of development for children and young adults. Instead, public schooling- or the more appropriate phrase, government schooling- has stifled educational outputs among American students for decades. We've seen a historic fall in math and reading scores among students, primarily fueled during the pandemic. To combat stagnant and falling test grades and relatively low academic performance by American students, the Department of Education has proposed myriad "solutions." New testing guidelines, weighted classes, and even centralized learning standards in Common Core have all been utilized but have seen little improvement over time in math and reading scores.

While the state deliberates on the best way to continue educating (or indoctrinating) our children, School Choice advocates have become much more vocal in recent years as an alternative to public schooling and educational zoning restrictions. Following free-market principles, schools should be able to compete for students to attend. The higher the academic quality of a school, the more likely a parent would send their children— and money— to that institution. Parents across the country have begun taking a more assertive stance in their children's education. Advocating for school choice is the apparent path forward for educational freedom and parental guidance in their children's education.

Students are zoned to a public school based on their zip code. Whichever school falls into their zip code is the one parents are bound to send their child to, regardless of the academic success of that school. If a parent wants to send their child to a better school outside of their district, they're out of luck. School Choice advocate Corey DeAngelis, who has been featured in the New York Post, told the Post that "the common sense of a school choice system, through which parents are given the taxpayer funds allocated to their child — an average of $15,424 per student annually — to spend on whatever form of education best suits their family." Simply put, the money follows the child, not the school. Schools would be actively competing for the parent's tax dollars and would work to be better academically than other local schools. Free market and competition principles work for innovation and business, so why not for our schools?

School Choice laws have a positive side effect on students' lives and the schools themselves. The city of Washington, D.C., experimented with a School Choice scholarship program for underprivileged families called the D.C. Opportunity Scholarship Program (DCOSP) and MO found that "the graduation rate based on parent-provided information was 82 percent for the treatment group compared to 70 percent for the control group." This shows a 12% increase in graduation rates for the group of students that were given this scholarship. Further, this same study showed that 21% of schools made efforts to improve their buildings when DCOSP was released, 22% added parent orientation to hear parent feedback, 8% altered safety rules, 24% encouraged more parental guidance in schools, and 17% increased safety precautions. An eye-opening 28% of schools in D.C. reported making changes to retain students. In D.C., school choice has proven to be successful at improving school quality.

The City of Milwaukee had similar successes with its trial of school choice. The previously quoted Corey DeAngelis ran a study with Patrick Wolf, an author from Education Next, to see the relationship between crime and school choice. DeAngelis and Wolf analyzed if teens in High School exposed to school vouchers committed offenses compared to those students in a control group, simply in standard public schooling. Controlling for specific variables that the authors listed, including home life, test scores, and demographics, the results show that "persistently attending a private school through a voucher program can decrease subsequent crime rates." Private schools not only can improve students' academics, but if this Milwaukee experiment has anything to say, can also decrease crime rates amongst students.

Not only is it true that School Choice has a statistical benefit to students, but voters are beginning to pick up on this too. The Thomas Fordham Institute conducted a study of potential voters in 2017 and found that 64% of these voters were in favor of School Choice programs. Similarly, Education Next found in 2018 that 54% of people surveyed would be in favor of School Choice programs or related voucher scholarships. School Choice is an issue that can be campaigned on, and won with. Putting this policy in practice would be a huge win for School Choice advocates and students.

School Choice, which puts schools in a competition for the attendance of students and for funding, has shown to be successful in improving the quality of our schools. Not only does it improve students' education, but it increases infrastructure, lowers crime amongst students, and has grown to have a great deal of support from voters. Embracing free-market principled School Choice programs is truly the future of education in America.

NYYRC Files Amicus Brief on Question of Presidential Immunity

The issue before the Court goes to a foundational question of constitutional governance: whether a President of the United States, the most democratically accountable officer of the Executive Branch, has autonomy over his own branch of government. Throughout the Federalist Papers, Alexander Hamilton conceptualized an “energetic” presidency. However, he noted that if a president is not given complete immunity, the executive branch will be rendered “impotent,” resulting in a dysfunctional and destructive government. Therefore, This case is of utmost importance to preserving our republican form of government, with three separate and equal branches of government.

The New York Young Republican Club Stands with Dries Van Langenhove

Europe is not free, and Belgium is leading the way in (proudly) violating its citizens’ civil rights. The travails of our European brethren thereby provide Americans with an instructive lesson on the importance of our First Amendment. Freedom of speech and association are a crux of American society, and we must defend them without exception. As publisher Larry Flynt said in response to the seminal Supreme Court decision Hustler Magazine v. Falwell, “If the First Amendment is intended to protect anything, it’s intended to protect offensive speech. If you’re not going to offend anyone, you don’t need protection.”

Far different standards apply across the Atlantic, where a post-war neoliberal tyranny has embedded itself deep in establishment discourse. The great Flemish patriot and friend of the New York Young Republican Club Dries Van Langenhove was sentenced earlier this week to one year in jail and fined €16,000. His crime? Being a member of a private group chat in which others disseminated “racist” and otherwise “mean” internet memes and the “possession of weapons”—that is, pepper spray.

Free speech and self-defense are clearly not God-given rights in the fake country of Belgium. Van Langenhove’s several co-defendants received eight- to ten-month suspended sentences and €8,000 fines. Another co-defendant was given a conditional discharge with the condition that he submit to a guided tour of the eyesore Kazerne Dossin Holocaust Museum (i.e., submit to state-enforced reeducation).

Belgium is not and never was a real nation, and its “government” will waste no opportunity to punish Flemish patriots like Van Langenhove. Such action underscores this “government’s” lack of character and illegitimacy. The Belgian “Justice” Department wasted millions of taxpayer euros and thousands of man-hours on lawfare against these young men for their private memes. Belgium has a history of manufacturing atrocities and manipulating public sentiment since World War I, and, sadly, Van Langenhove has fallen victim of its latest farce.

“Today I was sentenced to one year of effective prison sentence, 10 months of suspended prison sentence, €16,000 effective fine, €6,000 suspended fine, €10,000 in compensation and 10 years of loss of civil rights, which means I am no longer allowed to participate in politics,” Van Langenhove shared on X. Even the ever-vacillating Elon Musk was stunned by this tyranny, responding to Van Langenhove’s post by querying, “Someone else sent this meme in a group chat and you were given a prison sentence?” “Yes,” Van Langenhove (accurately) replied.

According to POLITICO’s Poll of Polls, Vlaams Belang, the major political party to which Van Langenhove’s youth movement, Schild & Vrienden, is most closely aligned, is now the biggest political force in Belgium. European and federal elections are due in June 2024. We know who the winners will be. We know what the people want. Van Langenhove left his seat in Parliament in 2023 to focus on political activism expressly to further these aims, and we encourage him to remain steadfast through this troubling period.

The New York Young Republican Club stands with Dries Van Langenhove and his party colleagues as the rump state occupying their nation unjustly persecutes them. In the meantime, we stand solidly in defense of our First Amendment right to criticize whomever we so choose for whatever reason we so choose. And if anything we say makes someone uncomfortable, we suggest that the aggrieved party man up. “For the Lord your God is going with you! He will fight for you against your enemies, and He will give you victory!” (Deuteronomy 20:4)

What We Need In the Next Senate Leader

Last month, Kentucky Republican Mitch McConnell blessed us all with an unexpected announcement: he will be leaving his post as Senate Minority Leader, effective the end of the year.

McConnell, 82, has led the Republican conference since 2007 and has been in the Senate for nearly 40 years.

With the exception of his stalwart defense of constitutional conservatives in the Supreme Court, his tenure has been marred by a neoconservative political persuasion that is fundamentally America-last.

McConnell, if you recall, was never a vocal proponent of building a wall during President Trump’s first term. He has been, however, a vociferous supporter of unfettered and unquestioned support to Ukraine, an illiberal corrupt country that is, in fact, not in America.

The New York Young Republican Club is overjoyed by Mitch's long-overdue retirement from the Senate body.

What, though, is needed from the next Senate Republican Conference leader?

What is abundantly clear is that this is Trump's party now. We cannot move backward. We need someone who understands the current priorities of this GOP: a strong border, an economic nationalist agenda, a solidly textualist Supreme Court, and a realist foreign policy that ALWAYS puts America first.

More of the same – like Texas Senator John Cornyn, for example – won't do.

The GOP has a prime opportunity to clean house and realign the conference in a meaningful way. This will require a fundamentally Trumpian leader.

We pray that they make the right decision.

A Lesson for DeSantis: Loyalty Counts

Back in January, Florida governor Ron DeSantis suspended his pitiful and futile presidential campaign and endorsed President Donald J. Trump. Once viewed as a respectable and skillful politician, DeSantis has thoroughly embarrassed himself with his contemptible disloyalty toward the former president.

It ought not be forgotten that Trump saved DeSantis's fledgling gubernatorial campaign in 2018. Without Trump's endorsement and tireless campaigning on behalf of the then-congressman, Andrew Gillum, a dogmatic Leftist with a disturbing history of drug and alcohol abuse, would have easily secured the governorship.

DeSantis, in short, owes his success to Trump. Rather than stand by Trump's side, however, the below-average-height governor embarked on what can only be described as a masochistic run for the presidency.

The New York Young Republican Club firmly and unmistakably rejects DeSantis's endorsement of Trump. DeSantis is not (and never was) an America-first candidate.

Rather, he is a country-club mouthpiece of the neoliberal wing of the GOP who would prefer to go back to the halcyon days of Paul Ryan and Eric Cantor. Don't be fooled by DeSantis's appeal to the MAGA movement; he represents nothing more than a reversion to the establishment Republican Party of the early aughts that championed billionaire tax cuts, the sunseting of Social Security, and unfettered illegal immigration at the southern border.

We wish the sad and brooding empty suit that is Ron DeSantis a happy early retirement, for he has jettisoned any chance of a viable political future with his shameless displays of cowardice and betrayal.

Goodbye to Ron and his nasty online sycophants. As Winston Churchill said, "[the] truth is incontrovertible. Panic may resent it, ignorance may deride it, malice may distort it, but there it is." (Unlike Ron, we used a real Churchill quote.)

Satan's Grip on the Biden Regime

Biden's regime is a Trojan horse attempt to foist a perverted brand of leftist progressivism on America.

With no religious displays at the White House on Easter Sunday and that most holy day designated as the latest celebration for the trans cult, to whom leftists and academia pander to more than anyone else in our society, make no mistake that the humiliation is the point. Trannies of course return the favor by shooting up Christian schools while the Biden Regime's FBI runs cover for these sickos.

This is not about Democrat vs. Republican or left vs. right, but rather good vs. evil. 21st-century progressivism has become Satan's latest mask in his attacks on humanity. We must reject his efforts totally as we double down on our faith, civic traditions, patriotism, and the civilizing forces that lead us to truth, beauty, and cosmic justice.

In this political form of the great battle of our times, the once and future President Donald J. Trump is God's chosen vessel to deliver us from political evil.

*“The most terrifying words in the English language are:
I'm from the government and I'm here to help.”
